The mail which arrived at Shanghai on the 18th instant was the No. 1 Daily News, the quickest ever delivered in Shanghai. It was something over thirty-two days, and one day earlier than the fastest mail hitherto received, which was also by one of the Norddeutscher Lloyd steamers.

The Courier says it is reported that Marquis Teang is spoken of at Peking as the successor of His Excellency Chang Chih-tung; the present Viceroy of the Two Kwangs. Such an appointment would cause much surprise in Canton. The present Viceroy has already reported, requested to be allowed to retire, but it is believed the request will not be granted, and that there will be no change in the office for some time to come.

The case heard before the Magistrate on Friday in which the Chinese was charged with the murder of his wife, and the outside offices are waiting to see what the result will be.

The Portuguese gunboat Rio Lima, Captain Almeida, arrived here yesterday from Macao.

Captain Colombo, R.N.,

THE RESCUE OF THE "ODER'S" PASSENGERS AND CREW.

Captain H. Nish, of the Ocean Steamship Company's steamer Cyclops, has furnished the following report to the Straits Times regarding the rescue of the passengers and crew of the German mail steamer Oder.

On May 30th at 6 p.m. bound from Suez to Colombo and steering along the northern shore of the Island of Socotra, we observed a vessel near the extreme eastern end flying signals of distress, guns, rockets, &c.; so we steered our vessel towards her, answering her signals as we did so. When we neared we considered it safe to stop and blow the whistle, having taken no notice of the signals sent out. At 7.30 a boat put off from the vessel in distress, and came towards us, and when she was alongside it proved to be in charge of the chief officer, who said he was the North German Lloyd's mail steamer Oder, homeward bound from China with mails, passengers, and general cargo. That the Oder had struck on the reef that morning, and that, and that on the was no hope of saving the vessel, the captain of the ship wished us to remain by than until daylight, and take them all on board this vessel. Agreeing to this pre-arranged signals were made and we stood off and on until daylight May 31st when the work of transferring them began with their own boats. By 8 a.m. the Captain (the last to leave) had his ship safely on board our vessel.

From the Captain we learned that he had dispatched to the third officer with four men and a boat at 3.30 to try and effect a landing on the shore, they thus succeeded in doing, but as they were returning to the ship the boat capsized in the surf, and one man only regained the ship, after being nearly four hours in the water. It is feared that the others perished. Thinking that there was a possibility of those having perished the ship was steamed slowly along the shore, as far as it was safe to go; but seeing no signals we gave up all hope of seeing them. And at 9 a.m. steamed westward full speed towards Aden, at the Captain's most urgent request. Anchored in Aden outer harbour at 3.15 p.m. June 2nd. At 5 p.m. Agents of the North German Lloyd are here to receive the crew, passengers, and mails sent on their behalf.

One lady, a passenger named Elise Fischer was too ill to be removed in the ordinary way with file rest, so the Health Officer of the port sent off a doctor at about 6 o'clock, but she just expired as it came alongside; they, however, took away the corpse. She was suffering from jaundice and dropsy.

JUN 15 m. east of Socotra bore S. W. & W. 4 miles. Strong gale with a heavy sea. The Oder apparently lying in the same position, sea breaking heavily around, and on board of her occasionally.

FACTS.

WHAT BECOMES OF ALL THE PINS?
The manufacturers of Birmingham, which hold the first rank in the pin industry, are said to produce about 37,000,000 of pins per day. The output of other pin factories in this country is about 17,000,000 per day, thus making a grand daily total of 54,000,000 pins for England alone. In France they make about 20,000,000 per day, while in Holland, Germany, and other countries, they produce about 10,000,000. The European production of pins is therefore about 84,000,000 daily, which appears so very large a number that one naturally asks "What do we do with all the pins?" It is seldom that a pin is broken, or spoiled, or worn out, but often they are lost. In fact, there is perhaps no small domestic article that one can think of, of which there is so much waste, by loss, in pins. This is so small and insignificant an article that few people would take the trouble to stoop and pick one up; and if a few are lost daily in every household in this way, collectively the number which disappears will be very large. It is probable, therefore, that pins disappear from circulation by loss, and consequently that, roughly speaking, 84,000,000 of pins are lost every day in Europe. Taking the population of Europe as 240,000,000, it would appear that one pin is not lost by each individual every day, but on the average, as nearly as possible on every third day; and if all the world participates in this loss of pins, then it would seem, after all, that we are not very prodigal of pins. This loss of pins represents more than a thousand (£1,000) per day. In the factories the pins are made faster than one can count them. The machines employed are so perfect that they cut wires into pieces of the right length, head these pieces, point them, polish them, sort them out, and stick them into papers all in rows, to such a pitch has our mechanical ingenuity reached. A machine of this kind, so far as pin-making is concerned, appears to have life, so rapid and precise are its movements.—The World of Wonders.

THE TEETH OF LOUIS QUATORZE

In the Union Medicale for April 8 appeared an interesting article by Dr. T. David, entitled "Les Dent de Louis XIV." It is founded on the reports which were drawn up and carefully preserved by that monarch's physicians and dentists. Louis XIV., whose father died of phthisis, who suffered from fistula in his young age, was subjected to exhausting pleasures; who was perpetually exposed to all kinds of mental annoyance; and who certainly performed a large amount of hard work, happened, nevertheless, to live through the longest authentic reign ever recorded—namely, seventy-two years. His teeth were very unsound, and, before middle age, all those in the upper jaw had been lost or reduced to carious stumps. As the King had a large appetite and could not masticate his food, he was subject to severe dyspepsia. Throughout the whole of the memorable year 1682 he suffered from oedema of the upper jaw, following the extraction of a stump, with suppuration in the sinews and decomposition of the pus. On one occasion the carious alveoli was touched fourteen times in one day with the actual cautery. Dr. David concluded by pointing out that this Great King had, in this illness alone, quite enough to try his patience; and it is not surprising that some persons have suggested that to this disease, which may have aggravated the evil state of mind which caused Louis XIV. to sign the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in November, 1685.—British Medical Journal.

THE FOUR BASIC TEMPERAMENTS.

It is an old observation in medicine, old as Hippocrates, that men are widely divided by temperaments, and that certain temperaments are better or worse than others in respect to the life values of those in whom they are discovered. At various periods different observers have described the human temperaments in different language and under different classifications, but it shows how little man has changed in respect to temperament, when we learn, as we easily can, by comparing the descriptions of the Father of Medicine with the natural facts living before us at this time, that the temperaments presented three thousand years ago are presented practically unchanged in the present day. There are four basic temperaments, all of which ought to be recognised in measuring up life for insurance. It is true they often commingle, two or more of them blending in the same person, owing to blenches of different temperaments through marriages; but when the bases are understood the blenches are easily read off. The best temperaments are (a) the sanguine; (b) the nervous; (c) the bilious; (d) the lymphatic.

THE SANGUINE TEMPERAMENT.

Persons of the pure sanguine or saignicous temperament the hair is red, or of warm auburn colour; the eyes are light blue or hazel grey; the complexion is ruddy; the skin is usually fleshy; the body is strong, tall, like, active; the voice sharp and piercing; the pulse quick; the mind hasty, keen, perceptive; the circulation quick, steady, and firm. Persons of this temperament, if they lead regular lives, are, as a rule, happy and long-lived. If they are ill, they recover quickly when recovery commences, although they are very liable to acute diseases; and if they do not actually recover, they hold long and tenaciously to life. They are robust, and properly so, as of "wiry constitution." They may generally be accepted as good lives for insurance, and if they are in health, they look younger than they really are. If they look older than they really are, they may fairly be suspected of organic deterioration in some vital part.

THE NERVOUS TEMPERAMENT.

Persons of nervous temperament have light hair, blue, deep blue, or bluish-grey eyes; fair complexion, with often abundant freckles; calm and soft features; and open expression. The representatives of this type are particularly fond of building and strength of body, for they are subject specially to the strumous disease. In the most favoured specimens the body is splendidly developed; the skeleton is large and strong, the muscles firm and strong; the movements of the body, slower than in those of the sanguine type, are graceful and powerful; the voice is full and resonant, the temper even, the will resolute, the circulation firm. In the least favoured specimens of the nervous temperament the complexion is pale, the hair greyish white, the features small, the expression feeble, the skeleton slight, the muscles deficient in power, the gait and bodily movement generally weak, the voice feeble, the temper irritable, the will irresolute, the circulation feeble. In these representatives of the nervous temperament the evidences of strumous affection are usually to be detected, and the history of the strumous disease is traceable in the line of their family.

FOR INSURANCE.

For insurance the people of nervous temperament who are of the first class are fairly recommendable, though they are not so long-lived as persons of the sanguine type. Those of whom who come under the second division I have named are bad representatives for insurance unless they be dead.

THE VARIOUS TEMPERAMENTS.

Representatives of the bilious temperament have dark hair, dark eyes, warty skin, large and often finely chiselled features, and staid expression. They have frequently the skeleton finely developed, and have great muscular power. They are, however, less like and active than those who are of sanguine cast, but they possess much greater mental capacity. Their voice is full and modulated, their temper passive; their will firm, their circulation steady and slow. They live to a full, if not to a ripe old age, when they are not exposed to unusual wear and tear of life. Taken as a whole, their vitality affords an excellent average. They are good lives for insurance.

THE LYMPHATIC TREATMENT.

The representatives of the lymphatic temperament have watery blue or gray eyes; light brownish white, or ash-coloured hair; pale complexion, heavy features, and dull expression. The skeleton, if it be large, is not elegantly formed; and the muscles, though they be fully developed, are fleshy and feeble. The movements of the limbs are clumsy, and the gait heavy. In the matter of physical construction, persons of pure lymphatic temperament are not favourably placed for enjoying length of life, for they are easily reduced in power during disease, and probably are open to danger from overstrain and physical shock in a more decided degree than others. But they have one remarkable redeeming quality, namely, that they are of even mind and take the events of life with more complacency than any other class of their fellows. This ensures them from much harm that would otherwise be apt to occur to them. They are not usually long-lived, for their tendency is prone to fatty degenerative changes; but they live commonly to a fair term of years and are moderately favourable for insurance.
